UNIVERSITY

Students as Colleagues is founded on the principles of collegiality, democracy, learning and discovery. Students train and learn to become professional reviewers of teaching practice and work collegially with volunteer staff partners from a different discipline.

YOUR

YOUR CHANGE

Over one trimester you will evaluate the content of a module and teaching practice discovering techniques of working together and new ways of looking at academic teaching practice.

Join us on this innovative project, building your skills and helping to improve teaching practice across the University by working together.

What's in it for staff?

All participants tell us it is hugely useful and enjoyable, gaining a 'students-eye' perspective on your module and teaching that is insightful, independent and collegial. Add to your continuing professional development in a flexible manner and deepen your skills as a teacher. Help open the door for students to gain an insight into the daily business of higher education.

What's in it for students?

It offers you an opportunity for formal training in evaluation, focus groups, feedback and communication skills. Working directly with a paired staff member from a different discipline, you will observe lectures and workshops and provide constructive and professional written and spoken feedback. All skills that look great on your CV.
